Raquel Blake

This week’s Dallas Voice cover girl is Raquel Blake, a drag queen artist who performs regularly at various venues across the DFW Metroplex.

Raquel started doing drag almost 10 years ago in Boston, Mass., where she is originally from. She worked there as a show host and cast member at several different bars.

In 2011, Raquel says, she started falling in love with the drag scene here in Dallas and was amazed by the outstanding caliber of the entertainers here. So in 2013, she packed up and headed south to Dallas and within six months of moving here had been added to the cast at JR.’s.

“Since then,” Raquel says, “I’ve been dubbed as one of the most booked queens in Dallas … or PLAN B (when no other queen is available, there’s always Plan B)!”

In the six years since she moved to Dallas, Raquel says, she has been given “some amazing opportunities” to travel and perform all over Texas and beyond, including Australia, California, Florida and Canada. And of course, she added, she has been thrilled to be “part of some amazing events held here in Dallas — DIFFA and Black Tie, just to name a couple.”

“I love Dallas, and I love my crazy Dallas family!” Raquel declares. “Without the love and support from my fantastic family here in a Dallas, I wouldn’t be able to be such a dedicated and hard worker.”

You can catch Raquel Blake on stage Mondays at JR.’s in Cassie Nova’s Freakshow, Tuesdays at JR.’s with host Bleach in the Double Trouble Tuesday Show, Thursdays at JR.’s in the Dreamgirls Show and two Fridays each month at the Red Goose Saloon in Fort Worth where she is host and show director for My Oh My, The Show.

On Sundays, she says, she’s either catching up on her sleep or performing in a drag brunch show somewhere.

Follow Raquel on Instagram (@Raquel_Blake), on Facebook (Raquel Blake), on Snapchat (RaquelBlake3) and online at MyOhMyTheShow.com.

Raquel’s nails for the cover photo were done by Mulan (@mulanalexander on Instagram), and her hair was by Sissy Wigs (@Sissywigs on Instagram).

The Rainbow Tree

Don’t you just love the gorgeous, rainbow-colored Christmas tree featured on the cover of this issue of Dallas Voice? Don’t you wish you had one of your own?

Well, your dreams can come true!

The Color Burst Rainbow Christmas tree, “a sparkling symbol of joy and unity,” is 7 feet tall, and is available online at Treetopia.com, retailing for $399.

And remember, don’t have to relegate your rainbow to just the month or two of the “holiday season” each year! It is, the folks at Treetopia note, “as versatile as it is vibrant” and “lends itself well to other celebrations throughout the year, be it birthdays, anniversaries or Mardi Gras.” And we can’t forget LGBT Pride Month or, of course, the LGBT high holiday of Halloween! Surely no LGBT home is complete without a festive Halloween Tree in October.

Oh hell, who are we kidding! Leave it up year-round and just switch out the decorations to match the season!

Dallas Assistant City Attorney Jayla Wilkerson didn’t pull any punches as she welcomed attendees to the Transgender Day of Remembrance services this week: “This has been a shitty year.”

Wilkerson, who heads Transgender Pride of Dallas, and Cathedral of Hope’s Transgender Council coordinated the Wednesday night commemoration held at the J. Erik Jonsson Library across the street from Dallas City Hall.

“This is an epidemic of violence,” said the Rev. Erin Wyma as she introduced a short video remembering the 22 trans women killed in the U.S. since last TDoR.

What brought this year’s ceremony so close to home was that four of the 22 murders reported this year were committed in Texas, and two of those murders — those of Muhlaysia Booker and Chynal Lindsey — took place in Dallas within just weeks of each other.

As the names of hundreds of transgender murder victims scrolled across a screen, participants read the names of the 22 U.S. victims, including each victim’s date of death, age and how they were killed. Then presenters read a quote from a friend of each victim to remind everyone attending these were more than just victims; these were each women whom other people loved.

Stacey Monroe spoke at the event about her friend, Daniela Calderon-Rivera, who was shot multiple times at a bus stop in Northwest Dallas on Sept. 20 — but survived.

Monroe said she was there as a “voice for someone who lives in fear” now after having fled Honduras because of violence against the trans community there. “She saw this as a land of opportunity. Then on Sept. 20, someone — a monster — tried to end her life for being trans.”

Monroe called on the trans community and allies to do better.

Calderon-Rivera didn’t attend. Monroe said it was because since her shooting, she’s had trouble dealing with crowds. And since her attacker is free after being released on bond, she fears being out in public.

“The emotional and physical damage is irreversible,” Monroe said. “I fear for her safety.”

Domingo Ramirez-Cayente was arrested within days of the attack on Calderon-Rivera and confessed to shouting gay and trans insults at Calderon-Rivera before shooting her. Before his victim was even able to leave the hospital, he was released from jail on a $25,000 bond and soon after disappeared, possibly having fled the country.

On Thursday, Nov. 21, Monroe said, a rally was scheduled for 6 p.m. outside the Frank Crowley Criminal Courts to bring attention to the case. Specifically, she said, they’re demanding Dallas Police Chief U. Reneé Hall and Sheriff Marian Brown work with the FBI and the Consulate of Mexico to find her attacker and bring him to justice. (The event was scheduled after Dallas Voice press time. Visit InstanTEA at DallasVoice.com for coverage.)

In addition, Monroe said, the group supporting Calderon-Rivera wants Dallas County Commissioners Court... to review Judge Hal Turley’s decision to set the bond in an attempted murder case so low. And finally, she said, once he’s caught, Calderon-Rivera and her supporters want District Attorney John Creuzot to prosecute Ramirez-Cayente to the fullest extent of the law.

Although it wasn’t noted during the ceremony, the event took place on the library’s seventh floor. That’s where Dallas’ original copy of the Declaration of Independence is housed, the only copy of the document west of the Mississippi.

After the event in the library, several dozen participants walked across the street to the steps of Dallas City Hall for a candle lighting ceremony, a re-reading of Equality Texas
hires a new CEO

Ricardo Martinez comes from Stand for Children and hopes his work helps the next LGBT generation

DAVID TAFFET | Senior Staff Writer
taffet@dallasvoice.com

Ricardo Martinez hasn’t done lobbying work before, but his efforts helped repeal Arizona’s No Promo Homo law. Born in Mexico City, Martinez grew up in New York and has lived in Phoenix for the last five years. But when the chance came along to lead Equality Texas, he knew he couldn’t let that opportunity pass him by.

“The universe has a plan for me,” Martinez said. “This is where I need to go next.”

There is, he said, just something about Texas: “It’s on the brink of change.” He wants to help make that change happen. Martinez wasn’t looking for a job when Equality Texas contacted him about the position. He was working in Phoenix for Stand for Children. He was on the national staff but worked in the Phoenix office as director of constituent engagement.

Stand for Children is an organization that works to ensure all students have a fair shot at a quality and relevant education, Martinez explained, adding that how the organization does that looks different in different states. In Texas, Stand for Children works through the Home Visit Project to train and empower teachers to conduct relationship-building home visits with their students’ families.

Before moving to Phoenix, Martinez worked for GLSEN — the Gay, Lesbian, Straight Education Network — in New York City. He worked there as a generalist, advising chapters on organizing, fundraising, managing a board, engaging volunteers and more. Once he came to Arizona, he continued volunteering for the organization and became a local board member.

As a GLSEN board member, Martinez helped work on the repeal of Arizona’s “No Promo Homo” law, legislation that prevented teachers from including any positive representation of LGBT people in the classroom. That included leaving HIV education out of sex education curricula as well as preventing LGBT people from being represented.
If you want students to be proud of who they are, Martinez said, they need to be represented.

“The law was being misinterpreted,” he said and was under threat of being declared unconstitutional at the time of its repeal. It was repealed, he added, by building partnerships.

“Collaboration is everything,” he said.

Martinez comes to Equality Texas at an opportune time in the Texas legislative cycle. He has a year to get prepared before the 2020 elections and then an additional two months before the next session starts.

Noting that Equality Texas is “an organization with a rich legacy,” Martinez said he plans to spend his first three to six months on the job on an introduction tour and learning about Equality Texas.

His first year will be a time to learn and build, he said, and provide others outside the LGBT community with tools they can use to work on behalf of our community. Martinez said he’ll use his first months to “build relationships with stakeholders” within the community, “do a lot of learning,” and then “create a plan.”

While he has more than a year to devise his legislative plan and has only briefly met members of the Texas House LGBT Caucus briefly at Equality Texas’ recent 30th anniversary celebration, he has ideas.

Martinez said he likes interim CEO Angela Hale’s idea of “going on the offensive” by introducing comprehensive nondiscrimination legislation. Also on his list is protecting minors with a ban on discredited conversion therapy. Then he will spend much of his time “fighting off the bad stuff,” something he learned during his years in Phoenix.

“GLSEN has a piece of my heart,” Martinez said, and he’d like to see more chapters in Texas. Currently, the only active chapter is in Austin.

He said he needs to learn more about senior issues in the Texas LGBTQ community, and he is anxious to meet with Coalition for Aging LGBT, active in four North Texas counties, and other senior groups in Texas.

While in Austin for Equality Texas’ 30th anniversary celebration, at which he was introduced to attendees, Martinez said he had a little time to search for an apartment with his partner, Kenny Dann. But for the moment, he’ll be moving to Texas alone while Dann completes a building project in Phoenix where he is constructing several rental units. Dann hopes to join Martinez in Austin within six months.

Dann is also from New York, but the two met in Phoenix and have been together more than three years.

Martinez said he wasn’t looking for a new job but was suggested for it by Andy Marra whom he met at a White House reception. He had been nominated as an emerging LGBT leader for his work with GLSEN and was one of between 30 and 40 other LGBT people between the ages of 17 and 30 chosen for the honor by President Barack Obama. At a reception held at Vice President Joe Biden’s residence, Martinez said he met Marra who has since been named executive director of the Transgender Legal Defense and Education Fund.

Martinez said he wraps up his work with Stand for Children this week and then has a week to move to Austin before starting his new job.

“I don’t know that I’ve experienced a city with a vibe like Austin,” he said. “I’m incredibly excited.”

the names of those who were murdered in the U.S. and comments by members of the crowd.

One of the Sisters of Perpetual Indulgence offered a prayer for trans women who have been attacked. One trans person talked about being estranged from family. Others spoke of living in fear, while Monroe said, “I see progress.”

Since the massive surge of publicity surrounding Booker’s and Lindsey’s murders, as well as another attack on a Dallas trans woman in April, police have re-opened investigations into earlier cases. This week, Dallas Police asked for help in solving the 2017 murder of trans woman Armani Dante Morgan.

She was reported missing by her family on June 22, 2017. Just over a month later, her body was found near the 2900 block of Wilhurt Ave., an area west of I-45 and just south of Illinois Avenue that, police said, she was known to frequent.

Anyone with information related to her murder is asked to call Dallas police Det. Michael Yeric, Special Investigations Unit, at 214-671-3677.

Morgan is one of at least three trans-gender women known to have been killed in Dallas in the last four years whose murders remain unsolved. The others are Shade Schuler, whose decomposing body was found July 29, 2015, in a field off Regal Row, and Brittany White, who was found shot to death in her car in a parking lot in far southeast Dallas on Oct. 21, 2018.

This year, in addition to the two Dallas murders, Tracy Single and Itali Marlowe were killed in Houston. Worldwide, at least 331 transgender and gender diverse people have been murdered since the last Transgender Day of Remembrance.

In Dallas, Kendrell Lavar Lyles, 33, who had been arrested the previous day in connection with two unrelated murders was charged on June 12 for the murder of Muhlaysia Booker. Lyles remains in the Collin County jail.

Although Lyles was initially considered a person of interest in Chynal Lindsey’s death, police on June 20 announced that they had arrested Ruben Alvarado, 22, and charged him with murdering Lindsey. Alvarado remains in the Dallas County jail with bond set at $500,000.

The first time I met Richard Curtin, I was standing in line getting a sandwich at Buli. As I went to pay, I looked down at the tasty treats surrounding the register and saw a stack of CDs for sale. The CD was called All The Lives Of Me, and it was by an artist I did not know named Richard D. Curtin.

Each person pictured on the CD cover looked completely different from the other — a man with slicked-back long hair gathered in a ponytail wearing a tux and singing into a 1950s microphone; a trailer-park-looking drag queen; a biker who looked eerily like Meatloaf, and an average-looking guy in shorts next to his dog.

I thought to myself that it was so cool that Buli was supporting local artists and singers. What I didn’t know was that the man, drag artist and artist pictured on that CD would become a prominent figure, friend and mentor in my life.

When most people hear the name Richard Curtin, they immediately think “Edna Jean Robinson” — and vice-versa. Both names are attached to a rich drag legacy in Dallas.

Some immediately associate those names with his 16-year tenure as the Rose Room show director, or maybe with one of her kitschy songs — “Boobs for Christmas” or “Shopping.” Maybe they watched Edna’s Angels on a Thursday night at JR.’s. Or maybe they donated to or attended her annual Edna Jean Trailer Park Christmas event benefiting Sam Houston Elementary School that she started back in 1993.

Maybe the associations go further back, to The Edna Jean and Pitiful Show that ran from 1998 to 2000, or to the infamous drag queen mud wrestling.

There are so many wonderful events, shows, fundraisers, and memories that Edna is attached to.

I love and admire Richard for all of the above. But it is the one thing he has done off the stage, away from the spotlight and out of drag that inspires me the most.

In August of 2017, Richard decided to take a break from city life and move to West Texas and go back to school and get his master’s degree at Sul Ross University in another art form, one that — along with singing, acting and drag — meant a lot to him: Painting.

I remember the first time I visited Richard’s eclectic home. His walls were full of paintings from a variety of artists as well as his own 1991-95 HIV series, Men and Women On The Moon. His paintings outshone all the others. Each piece was colorful with big, bold strokes and a hint of surrealism masked as playfully distorted reality.

Richard Curtin in his studio

“...They were good. His paintings now? Even better.

They tell the story of an artist who has learned how to see beyond the superficiality of his subject (and of life, really) and paint beyond those limits, the story of a raw talent that has learned how to control their gifts and make those restraints sing on the canvas.

I have not seen any of my friend’s new paintings in real life, but I will finally have my chance at his first art show back in Dallas on Saturday, Nov. 23, at Cedars Open Studios.

And while I’m excited to see them all — the landscapes, the drag queen portraits of my friends and family — I have to admit, I’m most excited about seeing my own portrait. When I sat for the photograph that would inspire his painting, I remember the energy of the room shifting when he picked up his camera. With each flash and direction, I become more and more captivated and more and more aware that I was in the presence of a great artist.

It wasn’t something he or anyone else told me. It was something that I felt. If art recognizes art, then I was witnessing and experiencing first-hand the grandness, depth and scope of his artistry.

THAT was what he captured in the two-dimensional space of his painting of me — a deep respect and desire to be a better artist, because I was being graphed and painted by a great one.

And while I’ve seen photographs of the painting in progress, I have never experienced the finished painting in the flesh. And that’s what I’m most excited about seeing.

Well, that and hugging the neck of my friend that I haven’t seen in two years!

When I asked Richard what this art show is about, he said, “It’s comprehensive of what I have been doing for the last three years of my life — living creatively!”

But I was even more curious to know — after knowing him only as a drag artist, singer and actor for so long — how long he had been painting?

He told me the story:

“I began to paint very early, 5-8 years old. My mother would give me cards, and I would copy the flowers on them and make new cards for her.

“In the early ’90s, AIDS was a huge influence in my early work. I started painting people living with and dying of AIDS. My first show exploring these themes was exhibited at the Art House and Museum Gallery in Deep Ellum. It was a way for me to heal, to remember and immortalize their beauty.

“I was also giving AIDS a face that wasn’t always a gay man. I painted women and straight couples. It was my therapy. It has always been my goal to retire and paint.”

But it was his last sentiment that struck a resonating life/goal chord in me: “I intended to find fame and fortune and retire as the reclusive Greta Garbo and paint in my studio by the sea. I have sort of done that.”

He is living his dream — a dream that, if I’m being honest with myself, has always been mine, too.

If this piece feels and reads like some kind of fangirl love letter, it is. There are very few people, let alone artists, left in this world like Richard. He is the quintessential Renaissance Man, a person who is great at many things — drag, singing, acting, comedy, painting. But he is also the kind of person that inspires us to evolve beyond our current situation, to take what could be one of the worst experiences in our lives and transform it into our greatest achievement.

Because that’s exactly what he’s done. And out of all of Richard’s legacy, out of the many things he has done or created, this show, in my humble opinion, is his magnum opus, his greatest show on earth thus far. Because it is the result of an artist who has seen and experienced so much life now living off the grid, giving the time, space and energy necessary to marrying all that experience, all the many mediums of art and characters that live inside him, and bringing it all to life in every brushstroke on canvas.

The result is the amalgamation of one of Dallas’ most gifted multi-media artists, living creatively on his own terms.”

Richard D. Curtin’s show is happening Saturday, Nov. 23, 11 a.m. -6 p.m. at Cedars Open Studios Tour. CedarsOpenStudios.org.

Hymns, hims & hilarity abound in this nunsense holiday musical!

Dallas Voice: Rebecca, you recently joined HRC as the Texas state director. What’s your background? Rebecca Marques: Before I came to Texas, I was a political organizer in North Carolina and Florida. While I was in Florida working one night, I saw something on Twitter about a filibuster in Texas. It was the infamous Wendy Davis filibuster, and I was hooked. Here I was, miles away in another state, following along to a fight in which I had no stake. But it was so moving. That filibuster brought me to Texas. It inspired me, seeing how many Texans were willing to show up and shake the halls of their Capitol.

Those same people who showed up by the thousands to protest this anti-abortion bill also came out to help us defeat the anti-transgender Senate Bill 6 four years later. And they continue to show up against every discriminatory bill in the Texas legislature.

Many people like to write off Texas, but there is so much good that happens here and will happen here. I don’t mind if something is hard if it’s worth it — and Texas is definitely worth it.

Could you describe your role with the organization? As the Texas state director, I get to lead our efforts to advance LGBTQ rights on a local level, at the ballot box, at the state Capitol and in our communities. During the legislative session, HRC works closely with ally organizations to defeat any anti-LGBTQ legislation and promote LGBTQ equality.

We have an amazing on-the-ground team in Texas that truly reflects the diverse state we live in. In addition to staff, HRC has strong volunteer leaders in Dallas/Fort Worth, the greater Houston area, San Antonio and Austin. We’ll leverage all of our support in the state to make sure Texas becomes a welcoming place for everyone.

What do you see as HRC’s role in the upcoming 2020 election? What has the organization done at the grassroots level ahead of the elections? 2020 is going to be the election of a lifetime in Texas. We have a shot at creating a bipartisan, pro-equality majority in the Texas House. If Gina Ortiz Jones [in Congressional District 23] is elected, she will become the... first openly-LGBTQ member of Congress elected from Texas. We have a real chance to make history here, and we’ve already begun working to make it happen. HRC has already endorsed Reps. Lizzie Fletcher and Colin Allred for re-election, along with congressional candidates Gina Ortiz Jones and state Rep. Julie Johnson.

How do you foresee HRC’s presence in Texas in 2020 and beyond? HRC has had a presence in Texas for many years. Recently, Texas became a priority state in Project One America, which means our commitment to Texas is strong and long-term. We will work very closely with our coalition and cross-movement partners as we increase our electoral and programmatic work across the state.

On a personal note, what do you do in your free time? Netflix.

Recently, we endorsed Eliz Markowitz in the special election for Texas House District 28. Markowitz is the only pro-equality candidate in the race and is openly queer. We worked with our partners Equality Texas and Texas Freedom Network to get out the vote for Markowitz. Markowitz came in first [on Nov. 5] and made the runoff, which was a huge feat! We know that it’s so important to build the support for Markowitz now, so we know that seat will flip in 2020. This will be a pivotal race if we are going to create a pro-equality majority.

What’s your relationship with other LGBTQ groups in the state, like Equality Texas and, locally, with Resource Center? Do you engage in any intersectional work? We work closely alongside our state coalition partners Equality Texas, both in our legislative and electoral work. We’ve also been part of the “All In For Equality” coalition with partners Equality Texas, Transgender Education Network of Texas, Texas Freedom Network and the ACLU of Texas since 2017. Together, our organizations work both inside and outside the state Capitol to advance equality.

Planned Parenthood is also one of our most important partnerships. Recently in Houston, Planned Parenthood Gulf Coast launched their trans care services. We work with Planned Parenthood Texas Votes closely to coordinate on election strategy.

We accept most insurance plans!
Not perfect, but ...

Are there issues with the Salvation Army? Yes. Does the local agency do its best for LGBTQ people? Also yes.

Within this diverse queer community, an annual holiday season tradition is being created. Mirroring retail, the push to accelerate our yuletide giving begins to surface earlier and earlier with each passing year. Here in Dallas temperatures have just dipped enough to bring us out of the heat advisories, so it’s time to deck the halls and settle back for a warm winter’s nap.

And as usual, ‘tis the season to pass judgement on the Salvation Army’s abhorrent treatment of the LGBTQ community.

Within the past five years, both the Washington Post and the Advocate have presented very reasonable views on this religious organization’s efficacy in administering to the needs of homeless LGBTQ. In both articles, the accusations that the Salvation Army discriminates against us was presented, and those arguments are not without merit.

Religion and this community will always be in a convoluted relationship, with individuals that have chosen to live their lives openly and with integrity pitted against a system of belief garnered from spiritual teachings interpreted to reflect the prejudices and fear of the practitioners. No doubt, a portion of the Salvation Army’s “soldiers” believe that homosexuality is a sin, and every person’s natal gender assignment is sanctified by God.

So the question is, can someone who holds dear those values and beliefs truly deliver the Salvation Army’s services and outreach to hungry and homeless LGBTQ? I say yes. It’s possible.

It’s likely that, without any supervision or training including cultural competency, these individuals probably deliver those services while being inappropriate and condescending to queer people. But that’s not limited to the Salvation Army or any other social services agency. Still, in 2019, some 50 years after the birth of the LGBTQ civil rights movement and all the subsequent visibility, we are subjected to such behavior daily.

This happens because companies, both big and small, do not train their employees on dealing with the LGBTQ community, and they do not monitor those employees’ interactions with LGBTQ customers. Even major companies vetted by queer indexing continue to fail.

Most LGBTQ folks treat this discourtesy as if it is business as usual; yet, we take issue with the Salvation Army?

Could our persistence with this tribal tantrum directed at Salvation Army be some healthy outcry from us demanding we be shown respect? Would it not be more effective if we individually began addressing this disrespect in our own daily encounters? Companies — all companies — have to be held accountable. Venting your frustration at the errant worker serves no purpose. Demanding to speak to a supervisor and following up with calls and/or letters to the company has a positive influence.

Everything that is out there concerning the Salvation Army indicates that the organization is considering our criticism about how we are treated. That culture is adapting to the reality that we deserve dignity when accessing their services.

Can a religious organization guarantee that everyone in their employ adhere to those tenants? Not really. Religion is always the go-to for justifying poor behavior. But the Salvation Army is making it clear in all of their public declarations that the LGBTQ community is included in their mission and that they care about us. There is recent effort showing that employees are being educated and held accountable.

Like so many others, every year I used to trot out the same kind of cautionary advice about this organization, attempting to steer others away from donating during the holiday season. Thing is, I was wrong. At least, as far as the work being done by the Salvation Army in North Texas goes, I was wrong.

Two years ago, a former employee challenged my position on the issue after seeing my posts on social media. This individual had become a licensed counselor for battered women and worked at the Salvation Army. She invited me to meet with the local executive director, Blake Fetterman. I did, and I can tell you, Blake is the real deal. Under Blake’s leadership, the Salvation Army here in Dallas provides the highest level of compassion for LGBTQ people. She claims that the national organization is catching up with the level of care offered here and that national leadership supports her entirely.

Over the years, I have worked with several good people that represented terrible organizations. Unfortunately, the good work they accomplished always evaporated when the individual left. But Blake has held her position for nearly 10 years now, which is a good sign. Every queer-affirming homeless project (like Oak Lawn Methodist Church) in the area supports Blake and the Salvation Army. Trans leadership attests that its shelter is the safest environment for trans women.

Due to its religious affiliation, Salvation Army will never be the perfect option for us as LGBTQ people. But it is the best solution we have now. And Blake and her team promise that those in our community that need Salvation Army’s services will be helped.

I believe that we get lost in our own privilege sometimes when we start talking about this topic. We fail to realize that a homeless person cares far more about being dry, safe and warm than they do about our armchair political correctness. Several of us in this community have developed relationships with Blake Fetterman. I invite you to get to know her, too, and I urge you to support her work.

She is doing a stellar job protecting our most marginalized people. If we truly care about them, we must bend and work with the Salvation Army. If people cannot stretch like that, then maybe we can just silence the rhetoric while some- one else helps.
BODY & FASHION

DIA DE LOS PRESENTS

A piece of jewelry, especially a ring, exudes subtext as a gift, especially during the holidays. But a skull ring from Lula B’s gives you a little wiggle room — it’s edgy and suggests a certain cool, but for your punk giftee or to suggest a sugar skull by way of Dia de los Muertos, this might suggest something more. Made of 925 sterling silver, this one-ounce ring makes a statement... without making a commitment.

$65. Available at Lula B’s (in the Design District and Oak Cliff) or LulaBsDallas.com.

BANGIN’ BRACELET

Dallas jeweler Joe Pacetti knows quality and style when he sees it, and we can see it too in the luxurious, hand-dyed metal cuff from his collection of eye-catching accessories. The Japanese stingray leather’s naturally-pebbled texture adds exotic elegance and shimmers like black pearls.

PIECE OF CAKE

Underwear can (and should) be sexy, but why not also transform your underwear into funderwear? The Manbuns brand does just that, with hot boxer-briefs in four styles (Cheesy Burgers, Gone Bananas, Pineapple Paradise and Somewhere Over the Rainbows). Best of all, the price won’t squeeze you too tight.

TRAIL OF Ts

Wanna know how you can really make America great again? Do your best to buy sustainable, U.S.-made products. American Backcountry puts out a collection of graphic T-shirts made using recycled materials and an environmentally-friendly dyeing process that infuses into the fabric, instead of just sitting on top of it, for endurance. And it makes sense they would care, since AB specializes in prints of national parks, trails and other outdoorsy themes, helped along by moisture-wicking technology that keeps you cool and dry even on a long hike.

CAMO COMFORT

Oh, the weather outside is frightful, but you and your sweetie can stay warm inside — and look damn sexy doing it — in a pair of ribble camo longjohns from Addicted’s Flammable Ice collection. These form-flattering tights have a soft, breathable accent running up the inside of the legs to a cushy pouch. Available in black and olive drab.

$70. Addicted/ES Collection, 3926 Cedar Springs Road or at AddictedDallas.com.
THE SMELL OF TEXAS
We love all things Texas (except, sometimes, its politics), so it’s no surprise we support all the clothing from Texas Standard, which is made in the Lone Star State and always arrives in a package redolent of a woody aroma. Well, they have turned that smell into the Signature Standard cologne, a fragrance for men that also contains hints of bourbon, lavender and geranium. It’s a versatile, manly cologne great for day or night or any time of year … just like the man in your life.

PLAYING FOOTSIE
Women have long enjoyed access to thin socks with such low profiles you don’t even know they are wearing them, and now Invisisox offers the same benefit to men (and women can use them, too). These footies fit comfortably over the sole, toes and instep, with rubberized portions to control slippage allowing you to wear loafers seemingly commando without chafing.
$13.95 three pair. Available only at Invisisox.com.

CBD A-OK
Marijuana may not be legal yet in Texas, but CBD-based products sure are, and some have surprisingly useful therapeutic effects. Dr. Kerklaan makes a variety of creams and sprays to combat everything from PMS to general soreness. I can’t speak to the efficacy of the PMS product, but rubbing a bit of the sleep cream on my forehead has facilitated my sleep cycle without any psychotropic interactions — just a refreshing eucalyptus and peppermint aroma to get high on.
$40–$68. Available at DrKerklaan.com.

ONESIE SINGULAR SENSATION
OK, we admit it: We love onesies, and we don’t even have any toddlers. This hot fashion trend has expanded into all manner of styles, including a jaunty little reindeer that even Ralphie might proudly wear on Christmas morning. Of course, you can wear it out on The Strip or to any parties you fancy.
$20. Available at Out of the Closet, 3920 Cedar Springs Road.

IT'S A CAR!

We've all seen the movie or TV commercial where, on Christmas morning, a loved one walks into the driveway to find a car festooned with a big bow — what a gift! Well, why not in real life? Toyota not only makes some of the highest-quality cars on the market, they have styles — and price ranges — to fit every person and pocketbook. And Toyota of Irving can even help with the big bow.

Prices vary. Visit Toyota of Irving for inventory.

BACK FOR CHRISTMAS

It was just over a month ago that tornadoes devastated neighborhoods in North Dallas, including taking out North Haven Gardens. But the storied nursery will not be deterred. It’s back the week of Thanksgiving selling poinsettias, tannenbaums and other holiday greenery. Some traditions just have a way of fighting through.

Prices vary. Available at North Haven Gardens, 7700 Northaven Road or NHG.com

SHOE FETISH

What do you get the shoe-hoarder in your life who has every boot, slip-on, dock sider and Oxford on the planet? Why not a decorative set of vintage wood shoe forms from Dulce? These classic cobbler's tools are gussied up with their own acrylic heels, to give them the aura of sculpture.

$140. Available at Dulce Interior Consignment, 1208 N. Riverfront Blvd MyDulce.com

TAKE THAT TO THE BANK

Who says a piggy bank needs to look like a piggy? Why not, say, a poochie bank? That's exactly what the paint splatter statuettes from Interior Illusions are: Cute little coin holders with festive colors that are just as lovely as they are useful. Available in a variety of breeds... er, sizes and designs.

$86-$143. Available at Outlines Men's Wear, 3906 Cedar Springs Road or at OutlinesMensWear.com.

THE SWEET SMELL OF SUCCESS

What smells better than hand-poured, all-natural candles fragranced with high-quality scents? How about a new one every month? Vellabox is a candle subscription service that partners with many artisan chandlers from around the U.S. to curate a sensory experience, always accompanied by a small bonus gift. We love the aromas of Empathy, California “wine” candles (red and white!). Even the small one burns for 25 hours. That's a lot of nose pampering.

Starting at $10. Available at Vellabox.com.

ALL THE MARBLES

The guys at Erdos and Ko know good design when they see it ... and when they sell it. We love tons of stuff in their World Trade Center shop, including this snazzy side table. Made of green marble with gold-leaf finish, the 15-in. diameter table stands 20 inches high and fits sharply with any decor.

$595. Available at Erdos and Ko, 2050 N. Stemmons Expressway #10014 or ErdosAndKo.com.
CHASING A RAINBOW

In the wake of the Instagram-era, many folks like to immerse themselves in interactive pop-up exhibits, such as Dallas’ Sweet Tooth Hotel or Candytopia, often posing for and snapping selfies. But it’s not just big cities that have invested in such extravaganzas. Nestled off I-20 in Shreveport, La., stands Rainbow City, an enormous interactive art display that looks like a cartoon world.

This free pop-art exhibit, comprised of more than 40 colorful air-filled sculptures, will occupy Caddo Common Park, where the Shreveport Regional Arts Council recently held a Pride event within the display.

L.A.-based artists Arturo Sandoval III and Samuel Borkson spent several months planning and building the exhibit, an idea that stemmed from their desire to create an atmosphere able to unite diverse groups of people.

“Rainbow City was our vision for a communal experience,” Borkson says. “It’s just a welcoming, inclusive environmental installation. And doing it in Shreveport was special for us because it really nailed it home why we made that installation. And that’s to bring people together.”

Sandoval and Borkson first partnered in art about 18 years ago, titling their collaboration FriendsWithYou. Since then, they’ve fashioned works in sculpture, installation art, animation and spiritual engineering, among other media. Human connectivity often serves as a cornerstone in their works.

“When we started working together, we noticed that there was a lack of communal experiences,” Sandoval says, “that culture in general had done away with a lot of the convergence points of people, which we saw as an intricate part of the human experience. We set out to almost like redesign some of those gatherings of sorts, and that’s definitely one of the reasons why we created this experience.”

For Rainbow City, their main goal was to evoke physical interaction between people and the exhibit, as well as connect them to others’ similar experiences. Like other immersive pop-ups, visitors are encouraged to interact with sculpture pieces, and especially, each other.

“It’s not so much about the actual object but it’s really the space those objects contain and the people who are contained within it. And that’s the real art,” Sandoval says. “When we see people enjoying [our creations], then we feel like our work is actually alive.”

‘Dear Evan’ examines teenage mental illness

Dallas Summer Musicals begins its 2019–20 season with Dear Evan Hansen, a story about a teen’s struggle to improve his self-esteem. At the suggestion of his therapist, Evan Hansen writes a letter to himself describing the positive things he expects to happen during that day. But trouble brews after other eyes see the private letter, and a series of misunderstandings snowball. The musical, which won six Tony Awards including best musical and best score, dives into the turbulent waters of teen angst addressing subjects such as depression, anxiety and youth suicide.

DEETS: Music Hall at Fair Park, 901 First Ave.

Celebrate the holiday season with ‘A Christmas Carol’

Charles Dickens’ timeless classic returns to North Texas, courtesy of the Dallas Theater Center (as always). The crotchety loner Ebenezer Scrooge (Brandon Potter) loathes Christmas and kindness toward others. But with help from three unworldly spirits — each giving him a glimpse of his life past, future and present — Scrooge might realize the error of his ways in time to save him and Tiny Tim from a terrible fate. A cherished Dallas tradition, this production was adapted by Kevin Moriarty and directed by Joel Ferrell.

Falling slowly back in love with ‘Once’

The art house film Once, about a Dublin busker and an immigrant flower seller, was a surprise hit in 2007, even winning the Oscar for best song. But the stage musical did even better, taking eight Tonys including best musical. Set entirely in an Irish pub, it tracks the hesitant but charming relationship between the two and their friends, expressed through their dreams and music. It plays for one weekend only.

MONDAY 11.25

CABARET
Mama’s Party. Weekly cabaret night with special guest performances. Uptown Theatre, 120 E. Main St., Grand Prairie. 7:35 p.m. $10.

John D’Agata, co-author of the book ‘Lifespan of a Fact’ on which the play is based, will attend the Nov. 29 production at Stage West and host a post-show conversation.
Hola peeps. Sometimes when I sit down to write this column it’s easy, but sometimes I have to sit and stare at the screen until inspiration hits me. Usually I just write about whatever is going on in my life — unless, of course, I have little going on because, surprisingly enough, even though I’m a drag queen, I’m pretty boring.

But these past two weeks have been anything but boring. God, I can’t wait to get back to boring. Let me explain…

It all started about three weeks ago on a Monday evening. I was heating up some leftovers for dinner — I had made Chinese BBQ ribs for dinner a few days before and was excited to be eating them again. They were good af. So, as I was sitting down for dinner, I got a little dizzy. No big deal. It passed quickly, but I remember thinking, “That was weird.”

Then later that night, while I was in the dressing room getting ready for my show at JR.’s, it happened again. I had to grab hold of my locker to keep from falling as my head spun. It lasted a little longer than the first time, but then it passed.

By then it was starting to freak me out, but the show has got to go on, so I pushed through.

During the show that night, I made jokes about me being dizzy and told everyone that if I fell out while in drag flip me over and cut my corset off by the strings. I can replace the strings, but corsets are expensive! Nervous laughter all around.

Then during my second performance, another dizzy spell hit me. So I got off the stage and went to the back room. I passed the mic to Bleach and just stood there, head spinning. You remember that ride at Six Flags years ago? It was either called the Spinnaker or the Spindel Top, I don’t remember. But it was a round room, like you were in a barrel, and it spun faster and faster, sticking you to the wall and then dropping the floor out from under you, so you are just stuck to the wall from the centrifugal force.

I felt like I had just gotten off of that ride, but the spinning in my head would not stop.

I asked my husband Jamie to meet me there. It took a minute but I did it. Still, there was no way I was going to be able to drive myself home. So I left my car at work and went over to Sweet Mark’s place to crash on his couch until I felt better.

Luckily, I grabbed a trash can from the dressing room, because as soon as we were in the car —RALPH! Then we got to his place — on the third floor... with no elevator… and I collapsed on his couch. I called my husband and told him where I was and that I would Uber back to my car in the morning then get home as soon as I could. I laid there and tried to sleep. My friend Mark — this is why we call him Sweet — fixed me ice water, got me a cold wash rag and told me to wake him if I needed anything.

A few hours later, I woke to go to the bathroom to pee. The second I stood up the spinning returned, and I could barely walk. I knocked over anything in my path to get to the restroom, and I am sure I need to apologize to Sweet Mark and his roommate Justin, because I am positive I peed everywhere but in the toilet. I couldn’t tell where I was spinning. I should have sat down to pee like the lady I pretend to be.

I laid back down, and my head continued to spin. And so did my stomach. I continued to vomit even after there was nothing left inside of me, and then I dry-heaved and hacked like I was dying. It was awful.

At about 6:30 a.m. I realized it was not stopping at all, and I really started to worry. I had Sweet Mark drive me to the emergency room at the hospital in Waxahachie, so I could be closer to home if I had to stay. I asked my husband Jamie to meet us there. I dry-heaved most of the way there, plus — you know Dallas traffic. I couldn’t tell if it was minutes or hours, but that was a long ride.

Sweet Mark, Jamie and I got me to the emergency room. I had my puke bucket into the emergency room. I haven’t been to the emergency room for myself since I was in the eighth grade and fell out of a tree and broke both of my arms. They got to me pretty quick this time because they thought I might have had a stroke. That is horrifying to hear. They did some kind of C/T scan, gave me fluids and some nausea medication and did an EKG.

Eventually told me they didn’t think it was a stroke but instead an inner ear infection. I was so relieved. They had me make an appointment to see a neurologist in a few days and sent me home. They told me to basically stay in bed and rest and eventually the spinning would slow down and stop.

I spent the next week doing very little. I couldn’t drive; I could not walk without staggering like a drunk, and my stomach was queasy all the time. For the first five days, I couldn’t even really watch TV without wanting to hurl. If you know me, you know that I watch a lot of television. I was in my own personal hell.

I hate missing work more than anything. I can’t stand not knowing what is going on in my Rose Room. So on that Saturday night I tried to work. Big mistake. BIG. I got to the club, got completely painted and, 10 minutes before the show started, I started to vomit again. I thought I could push through the dizziness, and if I focused I’d be okay to work. I was wrong.

That will go down in my history as one of the worst nights ever. My head spun, and I threw up off and on until about 10 a.m. Sunday morning. It was horrible. I was hot; I was cold; I was seasick from my head spinning. I was worthless.

The next Monday morning, I saw the neurologist. Apparently, I have something called Benign Positional Vertigo — something to do with crystals forming in the liquid in my inner ear, and when they hit sensitive areas, it makes me dizzy. I have an MRI scheduled in another week so hopefully they will know more then. It is so stupid — Cassie Nova has been taken down by being dizzy.

I have always been so independent and would rather do everything on my own, but this has humbled me. I am so thankful for my husband, my friends and my co-workers. This whole experience would have been so much worse without them.

I love being a couch potato, but being forced to be a couch potato is no bueno. Like I said, I can’t wait to get back to being boring, although I will be even more thankful for every day that I get to feel normal again. The stage is my happy place, and not being there is fucking with me more than the vertigo. Hopefully I can get back to my normal soon. I will never take it for granted — ever. Every day, the spinning is slowing down more and more, but it’s taking forever to stop.

Sorry for my bitch session but this is the only thing on my mind for three weeks now! Remember to always love more, bitch less and be fabulous! XOXO, Cassie Nova
