Biden signs executive order protecting LGBTQ people against discrimination

Within hours of being inaugurated, President Joe Biden had finalized 17 executive actions, including one to prevent workplace discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation or gender identity. Biden’s office had previously described that order as one that “builds on” the U.S. Supreme Court’s ruling last summer in Bostock v. Clayton County, declaring that Title VII of the Civil Rights Act protects LGBTQ people from discrimination in the workplace.

Biden also signed order stopping funding for Trump’s border wall, cancelling the Keystone XL Pipeline, rejoining the Paris Climate Accord and stopping the U.S. from withdrawing from the World Health Organization. More such orders are expected in the days to come.

Update from U.S. National Figure Skating Championships

The U.S. figure skating world was rocked last night as the finals of the Ladies Competition aired live on NBC. Things were shaken like a mad martini with a series of ups and downs, spins and salchows, loops and lutzes. Bradie Tennell has played lady-in-waiting since she won the gold in 2018, but again (deservedly) ascended to the throne by winning the title. Karen Chen (2017 U.S. champion) made an exquisite journey back to the podium to nab the bronze, and two-time — and reigning — gold medalist Alysa Liu, battled puberty and a 3-inch growth spurt to earn a very respectable pewter medal (4th place).

Then there is silver. Shimmering silver. Dallas’ own Amber Glenn skated like a warrior and beat the odds to command the silver medal.

(Glenn, the 2014 Junior National champion, made a huge splash last year when she came out to Dallas Voice in a story that was reported internationally.)

Well-known for a fierce work ethic, Glenn, 21, has battled the good and the bad since 2014 to claim her own place on the senior level. Last night the bad became beautiful when she slayed the field with her emotionally shattering free skate to “Rain in Your Black Eyes” (original song by Ezio Bosso, musically reimagined and choreographed by the glorious Misha Ge).

Rachel Levine tapped to become first out transgender Senate-confirmed official Meet Midnight, a 4-year-old, 46-pound Chow mix who is going to be a delightful, loyal pal to whoever is lucky enough to adopt him. Midnight does a wonderful sit and is working on shake, although sometimes he can’t fight back his urge to turn it into a hug. He’s an active, curious dog who would do best in a home with an active owner who will take him out for daily exercise and play. He can be a bit timid meeting new people, but as soon as he sees the bag of treats in your hand, his whole face will light up and he’ll do his very best to impress you. Midnight is looking for a home where he can be the only dog with adults and older teens. Midnight is super playful but also enjoys a good cuddle and head scratch. Midnight is waiting for you at the Jan Rees-Jones Animal Care Center in Dallas. To request an appointment to meet him, please visit spca.org/adopt.

In an effort to reduce the potential for spreading COVID-19, the SPCA of Texas’ shelters, clinics, mobile adoption events and mobile wellness events remain closed to the public until further notice. Adoptions are available by appointment only. Adopters will need to submit an adoption inquiry form in order to begin the tele-adoption process and schedule an appointment to complete the adoption. President Joe Biden spent his first day issuing executive orders, including one protecting LGBTQ people against discrimination.

Democrat Joe Biden was sworn in on Wednesday, Jan. 20, as the next president of the United States, ushering in a much-improved political climate for LGBTQ people and, many might say, the nation.

In one of his first acts in office Wednesday, President Joe Biden signed several executive orders, including the order “Preventing and Combating Discrimination on the Basis of Gender Identity or Sexual Orientation.”

The Biden LGBT executive order “builds” on the U.S. Supreme Court’s decision last June that holds that Title VII of the federal Civil Rights Act protects employees from discrimination based on sexual orientation and gender identity. A press release on the President-Elect’s website before inauguration did not elaborate on what “build” means but said the executive order “will also direct agencies to take all lawful steps to make sure that federal anti-discrimination statutes that cover sex discrimination prohibit discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation and gender identity, protecting the rights of LGBTQ+ persons.”

According to the statement, “All persons should receive equal treatment under the law, no matter their gender identity or sexual orientation. The Biden-Harris Administration will prevent and combat discrimination on the basis of gender identity and sexual orientation. To begin this work, President-elect Biden will sign an executive order that builds on the U.S. Supreme Court’s decision in Bostock v. Clayton County and ensures that the federal government interprets Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 as prohibiting workplace discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation and gender identity.”

Sharon McGowan, national legal director of Lambda Legal, said her organization is “thrilled” with the the executive order establishing the reach of Bostock. She noted that, as recently as of Sunday, the U.S. Department of Justice under Trump issued a memo, saying that DOJ’s Civil Rights Division would “continue to abide by ... the multiple statutory and constitutional protections that may exempt religious employers and educational institutions from the rule announced in Bostock, or applications of Bostock’s reasoning to other statutes.”

For McGowan, “We thought it was important on Day One to recalibrate” the federal government’s interpretation of Bostock “and have a definitive statement that the Biden administration will fully implement Bostock.”

In addition to the executive order building on Bostock, President Biden signed 16 other executive moves within hours of his inauguration, many of them directly reversing actions by Trump. Among those were orders stopping the U.S.’s withdrawal from the World Health Organization, rejoining the Paris Climate Accord, mandating the wearing of masks on federal property, cancelling the Keystone XL Pipeline and halting funding for Trump’s border wall and more.

Just prior to Biden’s swearing in on Wednesday at noon, U.S. Supreme Court Justice Sonia Sotomayor administered the oath of office to now-Vice President Kamala Harris, the former U.S. senator from California and a strong and long-time supporter of LGBTQ equality. Her ascension marks the first time a woman has held one of the two highest positions in the U.S. government, and also the first time a person of color has held the position of vice president.

On Thursday, Jan. 21, a U.S. Senate committee took up Biden’s nomination of openly-gay Pete Buttigieg to serve as secretary of Transportation. His appointment marks the first time an openly LGBTQ person has been nominated to serve in a Cabinet position, although Trump in 2020 did appoint Richard Grennell as acting director of national intelligence, a Cabinet-level position.

Television coverage showed Buttigieg sitting with his husband Chasten on the inaugural platform. Both men were wearing what appeared to be KN95 masks underneath black cloth masks, a combination that helps mitigate the build up of moisture on cloth masks on cold days.

Biden had already announced another first on Jan. 19, appointing an openly-transgender person, Dr. Rachel Levine, to serve as assistant secretary of the Department of Health and Human Services. Levine, who has been serving as Pennsylvania’s health director, becomes the first out transgender person to be nominated for a position that requires U.S. Senate confirmation. According to the HHS website, the Office of the Assistant Secretary for Health, “oversees the Department’s key public health offices and programs, a number of Presidential and Secretarial advisory committees, 10 regional health offices across the nation, and the Office of the Surgeon General and the U.S. Public Health Service Commissioned Corps.”

Ruben Gonzales, executive director of LGBTQ Victory Institute, called Levine “one of the foremost experts on responding to this pandemic,” adding that the LGBTQ community is “united in standing with her for the confirmation fight ahead.”

The LGBTQ Victory Institute oversees a Presidential Appointments Initiative that puts forward LGBTQ candidates for positions throughout the administration.

One of the more bizarre moments of outgoing President Trump’s departure from Washington, D.C., came at a small 21-gun salute ceremony he staged for himself at Andrews Air Force Base before departing for his home in Florida prior to Biden’s inauguration.

According to a White House pool report, as Trump arrived, the sound speakers played openly gay performer Elton John’s “Love Lies Bleeding” (which includes the lyric, “Oh, it kills me to think of you with another man”).

As Trump finished his impromptu remarks to the small gathering and began walking to the plane, the speakers blared the Village People hit song, “YMCA,” often referred to as the “gay national anthem.” And as Air Force One lifted off the runway, the sound system was playing the last words of Frank Sinatra’s “I Did It My Way.”

Biden’s inaugural ceremony included Lady Gaga singing the National Anthem, followed by Jennifer Lopez singing a medley of “This Land is Your Land” and “America the Beautiful,” taking the chance in the middle of her performance to declare triumphantly in Spanish, “One nation, under God, indivisible with liberty and justice for all,” before also adding a sliver of her own hit, “Let’s Get Loud.”

A female fire department captain from South Fulton, Ga., delivered — and simultaneously signed for deaf observers — the Pledge of Allegiance. And a highlight of the day came when 23-year-old Amanda Gorman, the youngest inaugural poet ever, who recited her poem, “This Hill We Climb.”

In his inaugural address, Biden ac-
Dr. Courtney Sherman describes her approach to patient care

DAVID TAFFET | Senior Staff Writer
taffet@dallasvoice.com

Courtney Sherman said she’s a women’s health practitioner by trade specializing in sexual health. She holds a doctor of nursing practice degree. And the day we spoke she had passed her American Academy of HIV Medicine credentialing exam so is now considered an HIV specialist and has added AAHIVS to her long list of academic credits. She is now spending half her day at the Nelson Tebedo Clinic in the PrEP clinic and half her time at Resource Center’s LGBTQ Primary Medical Care office on the health campus on Reagan Street.

Sherman said she learned primary care in a military town and then got into public health. She opened Tarrant County’s PrEP clinic but for the first couple of years wasn’t allowed to talk about it. She wasn’t sure how it should be run, but she knew keeping it a secret wasn’t going to work.

“I had no idea what I was doing,” she said. “I ran into opposition. I discovered the LGBT community and learned about the negligence of the medical community.”

The opposition to prescribing PrEP seemed related to the idea that it gave gay men freedom to have sex without worrying about contracting HIV. Sherman said she couldn’t see the difference between PrEP and taking the vaccine to prevent HPV that’s spread sexually and causes cancers.

She said from the beginning she approached PrEP from the standpoint, “If we can prevent HIV, that’s responsible.” But she said she felt she was working with people who thought there was “something wrong with gay men’s brains, [that] all they want to do is have sex.”

To Sherman, sexuality is a basic human activity. She had trouble understanding the stigma and equated it to her own sexuality. “Because I’m on birth control, I’m a slut?” she said. “Human beings have sex — regardless of age or gender or sexual orientation.”

Sherman, by the way, is married to a man and is the mother of four. Her dining room table is their Zoom home school, with her husband working from home and overseeing their children’s education.

Sherman is passionate about expanding access to PrEP and sexual health among the LGBTQ community. She said some patients come to her on the side so their primary care physicians don’t know they’re on PrEP, “like it’s dirty …”

Sherman warned that her advice comes with a little bit of sarcasm. But, she added, Dr. Marc Tribble, who will be working with her as a primary care physician in Resource Center’s health clinic a few days a week, offers more traditional doctoring consultation for those who prefer that. She said their styles compliment each other well.

One bit of Sherman’s earliest medical experience has translated well into how she deals with insurance claims for transgender patients: Most medical offices would simply accept a rejection of coverage by an insurance provider, but Sherman has found ways to work around that. She said her first diagnosis of breast cancer was in a man, so she learned early to look for what’s unexpected and expect the insurance company to pay what’s covered.

But if a trans woman, for example, is having prostate problems, she going to treat the problem and deal with the insurance issues.

Sherman said Resource Center is looking to expand its primary care practice as well as get people on PrEP to protect themselves from HIV. To do that, the health clinic now has bilingual staff. She encouraged trans men and women looking for competent medical care to make an appointment and try their services.

When it comes to the roll out of the vaccine to protect against the coronavirus, Sherman called it very piecemeal and said Resource Center would love to become a vaccine distribution point.

As to her style, she said she’s also a patient: “I always try to be real and human.”

Making health care easier to access for trans men, women

MATHEW SHAW  |  Contributing Writer
mathews.yb@gmail.com

Of the almost 28,000 respondents who participated in the 2015 U.S. Transgender Survey, 33 percent reported a negative experience while seeing a healthcare provider within the previous year, and 23 percent did not see a doctor when they needed to out of fear of being mistreated as a transgender person.

Even though a federal judge last year blocked the Trump administration from enforcing a rule allowing healthcare practitioners to discriminate against trans patients, trans men and women still have no guarantee that their health care providers will even understand their health needs, much less not discriminate against them. That’s why technology companies aimed toward the trans community like Plume exist.

Plume is the first health technology company built by the trans community, for the trans community, according to Plume’s head of growth Soltan Bryce. There are more than 1.4 million trans folks in the U.S., yet they are one of the most underserved communities when it comes to access to reliable healthcare, Bryce said.

Guided by a team that is mostly trans, Plume provides access to gender-affirming hormone therapy through a smartphone. “At Plume, we talk a bit about being for trans people, by trans people. And we think that’s really important because there’s a shared understanding about the dearth of quality, accessible and convenient care for the trans community,” Bryce said.

He also noted that the pandemic has an isolating impact that makes seeking care difficult and has driven many to medication sharing. But, “Even in less pressing times, up to 50 percent of trans folks report both delaying care or not seeking care out of fear of discrimination or harassment,” he noted.

Plume is an app that can be downloaded onto a smartphone for a $99 a month subscription fee. The patient then fills out some forms on the app to create an individualized plan.

For Ezra Reynolds, who started using Plume last year, the process has been easy and convenient way to get to get hormone treatment without jumping through any hoops.

“I was very open and honest,” he recalled. “I was like, ‘Hey, I was on testosterone previously for five years. Here’s my dose.’ They basically took all the information I gave them and ran with it. It was a really relaxed process.”

The process for Reynolds includes scheduling a consultation, and the doctors get all information online through a third party app which enforces HIPAA law. In addition, Reynolds said he likes that the doctors are honest with him about his testosterone hormone levels.

“I’m glad that they’re going to tell me something in a positive manner,” he said. “They’re not going to allow you to take too much hormones if they don’t think it’s necessary.”

For many, the journey to expressing one’s authentic self as a trans person involves navigating a gender-normative medical system, Bryce said.

“There’s very few medical services out there that engage with people’s self expression, identity and personal...

Well-being as both gender-affirming care does and as Plume does,” he noted. “We’ve heard numerous patients stories that have been rife with excessively long wait times, administrative hurdles, [and] providers that are unfamiliar with treatment.”

Bryce added that Plume is venture-backed, meaning it is funded by venture capital firms that make an investment in them. In addition, Plume has added hundreds of patients a month to its service.

“Plume symbolizes what the best of gender affirming care can be,” he explained. “The ability to express your plumage.”

Plume is also the only company that offers virtual care 24/7. In under a year since its launch, it is available to more than 60 percent of the trans community, according to a press release.

“Accessing care itself is the really difficult thing to do. It can be the difference of life or death for some people.”

Michael Champion — nurse, husband, brother, friend, and mentor — passed away Tuesday, Jan. 12, due to COVID-19. Michael was born in Plymouth, Ind., on Aug. 15, 1954. He received his bachelor’s degree in Nursing and was director of nursing for the Park in Plano. Michael loved being a nurse and always put his patients first.

Michael was a natural entertainer; his alter ego, Sable Alexander, could high kick to the heavens. He loved raising money for the community and was always there with a helping hand, a kind word and, sometimes when needed, a raised eyebrow. He loved collecting anything related to Garfield or Lucille Ball, and he had one room dedicated to Lucille Ball, his favorite entertainer, and had her VitaMeataVegaMin skit down to a T. Michael was known for his quick wit, beautiful smile, his compassion and his love of life.

The love of Michael’s life was his partner and husband of 33 years, Bill Lindsey. Together they entertained all over Texas and the U.S., raising money for various groups and individuals. The two of them founded the Miss Gay Texas State and Miss Gay Texas State at Large pageant system, which focused on quality female impersonation like other pageant system but also on raising money for the LGBTQ and HIV/AIDS communities.

They also loved to travel, especially to Maui.

Michael is survived by his husband Bill, his sister Barbara Richmond and too many friends to name. (You know who you are.)

A Celebration of Life will be scheduled at a later time. In lieu of flowers, Bill asks that donations be made to the Miss Gay Texas State Pageant System via their Venmo account at MissGayTexas-State.

If you prefer to mail a check, please make check payable to the Miss Gay Texas State Pageant System and mail it to Anna Dickerson, 12050 High Meadow Court, Dallas, Texas 75234.

Time for a brave new day

Like hundreds of thousands of others around the country — around the world — on Wednesday, Jan. 20, I watched the inauguration of Joseph R. Biden Jr. and Kamala D. Harris as president and vice president of the United States of America. And yes, I got teary-eyed more than once over the course of the day, as I am sure many others did, although no doubt many were teary-eyed for very different reasons.

It was, for me, such a profoundly proud moment to watch as a woman of color was sworn in as vice president and to see the joy and pride on her face as she swore to well and faithfully discharge the duties of the office on which she was about to enter, so help her God.

It gave me such a huge sense of relief to hear President Biden speak, coherently and in full sentences, of hope and unity and actual duty to country. It was so refreshing to hear him pledge to be committed to all cultures, colors, characters, and conditions of man.

I most sincerely hope we can meet her challenge. But to do so, we must truly take to heart this part of her message: “There is always light, if only we are brave enough to see it, if only we’re brave enough to be it.”

But how can we “be the light”? We don’t even all agree on what that means. Part of the answer lies in President Biden’s words when he talked about how we have to come together as a country, how we have to learn to disagree without going to war against each other, how we must seek unity.

Don’t get me wrong. I am not suggesting that we “unify” with the people who stormed the U.S. Capitol on Jan. 6 or with those in Congress — or in the White House — who helped plan and stage and incite that attack. They must face the proper consequences for their heinous actions. That is justice. And where there is no justice, there is no peace and there is no light.

But when we demand that they pay the price, we have to make those demands for the right reason. It has to be justice, not vengeance. Vengeance is too easy, too common. And vengeance leads only to destruction. Hate only breeds more hate.

No, I am not saying we should just forgive and forget. This is no time to go all lollipops and rainbows.

We can’t let misplaced sympathies and some people’s self-serving calls for unity (now that they are no longer the majority) distract us from justice. Justice is necessary.

But we still live in the midst of a pandemic that has already taken the lives of more than 400,000 people in this country alone, more than 2 million worldwide. And the pandemic is far from the only danger we face. So we don’t have time for infighting and petty partisan bickering — and that goes both ways.

Democrats control the House, the Senate and the White House. But that doesn’t mean that Democrats get to just run roughshod over the Republicans. That will accomplish nothing.

That’s where bravery comes in. We have to be brave enough to put our country first, above partisan politics and above our personal needs and wants. That, I believe, is where Trump and his whole administration came up drastically short. And that is where the Biden administration and all of us cannot fall short.

We must be brave enough to be the light.

Getting back to nature, the LGBTQ way

You don’t have to go to a gym to get the exercise you need to stay fit and healthy. In fact, sometimes you can get more exercise — and have more fun — if you head outdoors. That’s the idea behind LGBT Outdoors, a group founded by Dallasite Justin Yoder to give LGBTQ people an outlet that combines outdoor adventures and camaraderie.

It began about a year-and-a-half ago when Yoder started an Instagram account featuring LGBTQ people who love the outdoors. It grew quickly and now has six chapters around the country. While the COVID-19 pandemic slowed the organization’s gatherings, Yoder said he hopes things will be ramping up again soon with the group’s first national gathering planned for September.

Yoder took a few minutes recently to answer some questions for Dallas Voice and introduce his organization to the broader community.

Dallas Voice: How did LGBT Outdoors get started, and how long has it been around? Justin Yoder: The outdoors has always played a big role in my life. I grew up on a farm in Missouri and have always loved what the outdoors had to offer. After coming out in 2010, I wondered if there was still a place for me in the outdoors. For a long time, I didn’t see one. So I started an Instagram account to feature members of the LGBTQ community who also loved the outdoors. I wanted to show the world that the outdoor space isn’t just for straight white guys — and that the LGBTQ+ community was equally capable of exploring, enjoying, and tackling the rugged wilderness.

Nearly immediately, the response from LGBTQ+ people was through the roof. About a year-and-a-half later, we still get messages saying, “I thought I was the only one!” Or “I’ve finally found my tribe!” This over-the-top response clearly told us that the outdoor world was a place that many LGBTQ+ people long for — and that a way to help facilitate connection was needed.

Is this a local organization? Or is it state-wide or national with local chapters? Yoder: While we are homegrown and based here in the DFW Metroplex, we currently have six chapters across the U.S. DFW, Houston, New York, Chicago, Denver and Orange, Calif. Each chapter is led by a vetted LGBT+ Outdoors ambassador. Our ambassadors are incredibly passionate about the outdoors and have diverse backgrounds from IT, the U.S. military, police — there’s even a neuroscience student. We give our ambassadors a decent level of freedom to choose and host event activities, as the terrain, outdoors culture and local natural offerings vary from chapter to chapter.

How does one become a member? Are there rules or dues involved? Yoder: We currently don’t have a “membership.” We curate a lively family/community in our private Facebook groups. We have a main group and local groups for each of our chapters. In order to protect those who are not “out,” we keep our groups private and screen each person who wants to join. Our main Facebook group currently has more than 3,200 “family members,” which is thrilling since we only recently created it in April of last year. We ask that those who join our Facebook groups simply respect each other and our community culture. You can find the group at Facebook.com/groups/LGBTOutdoors.

What do you think are the main advantages of participating in the group? The chance to socialize; opportunities for physical fitness activities; something else? Yoder: Nearly any doctor will tell you that physical activity of any sort is good for you, even better in the fresh air of a wild landscape. Most doctors will also tell you that having a sense of community — a sense of belonging — is vitally important as well, especially in a pandemic.

Even if most interaction is virtual at the moment (Facebook groups, virtual happy hours, etc.), we’ve been overjoyed to see the conversations and connections taking place. Our primary mission is to connect the LGBTQ+ community with the outdoors — and to each other. We want to be a safe place for people to genuinely feel a part of something, away from the chaos and noise of the bars and clubs.

Do you offer a variety of events to accommodate people of varying levels of ability/physical fitness? Yoder: We curate a lively family/community in our private Facebook groups. We have a main group and local groups for each of our chapters.

In order to protect those who are not “out,” we keep our groups private and screen each person who wants to join. Our main Dallas Voice: Have you done any activities in the warmer months, or do you have winter activities, too? Yoder: The great — gay — outdoors...
Do you have a schedule of upcoming events? I’ll answer these all together, as the answers sort of blur together. While getting started last year, we did successfully have a small handful of in-person events — all with Covid-compliant social distancing, extremely limited capacity, masks, etc. We’ve hosted varied events — from hiking and kayaking in DFW, fishing in Houston, national park visits in Colorado and Wyoming, hiking in New York and even a volunteer trash clean up in California.

The pandemic has obviously slowed things down as we can’t do what we want to do safely.

That being said, we do like hiking as a frequent event. Hiking has a very low barrier of entry. Nearly anyone can do it with tennis shoes and a water bottle in hand. Amateur hiking doesn’t require any costly gear or months of training.

As we continue to grow (and create a larger support base), we intend to offer many more in-person events to satisfy the needs of all ability levels to the best of our capability. But we always want everyone to feel welcome, no matter their experience level.

And once Covid is safely pushed back, we are open to nearly all outdoor activities. While we have our core structure, LGBT+ Outdoors is very much a community-driven machine. Feedback and input from “the fam” is both wanted AND needed. When the community says, “Hey! Let’s do THIS!” then our ambassadors will take
The right wellness tools

A few products to make your fitness journey easier

The key to success with any project is having the right tools for the job. When the project is yourself and your health and wellness, having the right tools is even more important. That’s why for our 2021 Wellness Issue, we’ve put together this list of fitness “tools” to help you reach your fitness goals.

SHOES

Let’s start with shoes, because if your feet hurt, everything hurts. There are all kinds of athletic shoes created for all kinds of different activities — running shoes, basketball shoes, hiking shoes, cross-trainers. But there’s a new trend in athletic footwear that encourages getting back to basics. These two brands are designed to help you do just that. KINIS Barefoot is a minimalist footwear company focused on helping you move in natural and healthy ways, offering two types of footwear designed with a barefoot concept in mind. KINIS creates a sock-and-shoe hybrid promoting the foot’s natural biomechanics — no arch support, zero drop and an ultra-thin outsole in a natural “foot-shaped” design to promote foot health. Check out the flexible, durable and machine washable Nomad style, the ultra-minimalist Lucy style or the biomechanically efficient Apollo Pro training shoes. Kevin.com

With HARMONY783 shoes, the idea is to get as close to barefoot as possible to take advantage of the concept of “grounding” or “earthing,” based on scientific research studies showing that direct connection with the earth’s surfaces can have major positive effects on our well-being reduction of inflammation, improved sleep, reduced anxiety, relief from pain and more. HARMONY783 focuses on creating stylish shoes engineered to facilitate the constant transfer of revitalizing electrons into our bodies through the simple act of walking. Walkers, joggers, loafers, flip-flops — Harmony783 has them all. Harmony783.com.

SLEEVES & SUPPORTS

Every athlete — from the pros to the weekend warriors — twists an ankle or pulls a muscle or something at some point. And if you, like me, are getting a little older, you might be finding out that you don’t have to be an athlete or even doing something even remotely strenuous to twist that ankle or pull that muscle. And there are all kinds of wraps and sleeves and supports available to help when that happens or to help keep it from happening. But Incrediwear’s wearable anti-inflammatory garments offer more than just support; they help you heal.

Incrediwear offers everything from sleeves for arms, legs, knees, elbows, even body sleeves to fit around your abdomen, as well as braces for hips and backs. They also have shorts, socks, gloves, performance pants and more, all infused with the circulation-enhancing semiconductor elements germanium and carbon, elements activated by your own body heat to help increase blood flow, thus delivering more oxygen to the affected area and promoting faster healing while reducing inflammation. Incrediwear.com.
SUPPLEMENTS

There are supplements galore on the market for every use imaginable. You wanna lose weight or gain muscle? There are supplements for that. Supplements to give you energy, to help you relax, to help you recover — whatever your need, whatever your goal there’s a supplement to help.

The folks at Three Hermits want to make your supplement game simple. They use time-tested ingredients to create just three different plant-based natural supplements that fit seamlessly into a modern lifestyle. Cinnamon+Wingreek helps stabilize blood sugar and aids with weight management. Moringa+Ashwagandha supports overall vitality while decreasing inflammation and stress. And Turmeric+Nirgundi aids in muscle recovery and helps support an active lifestyle. Choose one or mix and match. ThreeHermits.com.

SLEEP

The very foundation of overall wellness is a good night’s sleep. Sure, there are all kinds of sleep aids available, but some of us can’t rely on a “sleeping pill” because, well, we can’t afford those middle-of-the-night shopping sprees some sleep aids sometimes spur. I personally don’t use “sleep aid” pills because I have a low tolerance and have a hard time waking up the next morning. I can’t take half a benedryl without needing to sleep for at least two days!

Here are a couple of products to help you sleep without those side effects.

Embr Wave wellness bracelet is the first intelligent wearable that lets you control how you feel temperature. Can’t sleep because you are too hot or too cold? Embr Wave gives you a personal thermostat you wear on your wrist that lets you change that at the push of a button — just by cooling or warming the temperature-sensitive skin on the inside of your wrist. And that helps you feel more comfortable so that you can fall asleep faster and sleep more soundly. EmbrLabs.com.

Some folks — and again, I mean me — always run a window unit or a ceiling fan in the bedroom, not just to keep the room cool but to also provide that background of “white noise” to help them sleep. A lot of people also like to listen to music to help them sleep, but what if your partner prefers the quiet or maybe a different kind of music to sleep by? SleepPhones has the answer. Designed and manufactured by AcousticSheep LLC, SleepPhones have ultra-flat bluetooth speakers encased in a patented headband made of comfortable, environmentally-friendly SheepCloud fabric. That way you get the comfort of music without the bothersome bulk of traditional headphones and without worrying about losing an earbud. What’s that you say? Sounds like a great idea for running, too? Check out the RunPhones, too. SleepPhones.com.
there’s no reason why we can’t be as well. You can hike the same trail in the middle of winter AND the middle of summer, and it will be two completely different experiences.

As I’ve said, COVID — especially recently with the tragic jump in cases — has gotten to a point where we choose not to continue with our in-person events. So they’re on hold for the moment. We hope to be able to restart them in the spring, pending COVID numbers and local guidelines and regulations.

We are, however, in the early stages of planning our first nationwide weekend event, LGBT+ OutdoorFEST Sept. 24-26, at one of Texas’ favorite LGBT+-owned campgrounds, Rainbow Ranch. LGBT+ OutdoorFest will welcome “family” from across the nation for a gathering of camping, kayaking, hiking, education, community and much more! This will be a campout open to our entire LGBT+ Outdoors family and will include workshops, community experiences and some epic social time that can only be created outdoors.

What else do you think people need to know about the LGBT Outdoors? We want all LGBTQ+ people to know that there is a place for them in nature! Sure, the bars and clubs can be fun, but when it comes to feeding your spirit, what can be better than getting outdoors? We have a number of resources on our website, and, as soon as it is safe to host events again, we will be ramping back up with a variety of events around DFW such as kayaking, hiking and camping. So stay tuned and watch our website, LGBTOutdoors.com, for information.

Representation matters, but …

Good day, Muggles. I hope your new year is off and running in a magical way. Sure, it feels the world is burning around us, but how is it really going for you, personally?

So, for me it has been pretty boring: I watch TV. I get on the treadmill occasionally. I cook. I do shows three nights a week. I do laundry on Thursdays, and I nap way too much.

It is all just a blur of days that run into each other, making time fly by. I know 2020 was a horrible year but did anybody notice how fast it actually flew by? It’s crazy.

Now I would like to get on my soapbox and bitch a little bit about people and their opinions. First of all, I want to say that representation matters; it absolutely does. Have you watched Prom on Netflix? It is a cute little musical from the mind of Ryan Murphy starring Meryl Streep, Nicole Kidman and James Corden. The Late Late Show host plays a gay man in the movie, and it has pissed off a bunch of those keyboard warriors because he is — DUNT DUNT DUH! — straight!

People — and by people I mean the squeaky wheel assholes — have so much to say about a “straight” man playing a gay dude. It is called acting, people! I am just so annoyed by people having a problem with this. I know lots of gay actors, but I don’t know a single one of them that only wants to play gay characters.

Some people complained that he was too stereotypically gay, that he played the part just too gay. Fuck that! I know plenty of gays, and that is actually how some of us act. And I don’t see any shame in that. Some of us have a little more swish in our step and a little more sway in our hips.

I totally get using actual trans actors to play trans parts, and I hate when they white-wash a character that should have been Asian but is played by Scarlett Johansson. That is not what I am bitching about. James Corden was fabulous in Prom. Cheyenne Jackson, an openly gay man, is playing a straight guy on Call Me Kat, and ain’t nobody bitchin’ about that.

There was also an uproar online from people bitching that a hearing individual — Henry Zaga, a total hottie — was playing a deaf and nonverbal man — Nick Andros — in The Stand reboot. They think that the part should have gone to a deaf actor. But if you know the story, you know that Nick can hear and speak in dreams, so I get why they used Zaga. BDubs, y’all know I am a huge Stephen King fan, and I think this new Stand is really good. They changed a lot to update it, but I’m totally on board with it.

I would love to see more deaf or hearing-impaired actors being used in TV and movies. The Walking Dead introduced a deaf character and a hard-of-hearing character a few seasons ago, and now they are fan favorites. Lauren Ridoff as Connie and Angel Theory as Kelly are so good on the show. It freaks me out when zombies are involved in any way, but to not hear those fuckers coming — that terrifies me.

Okay — I will get off my soapbox about this for now. But in conclusion: In my opinion, you don’t have to be gay to play a gay on TV. You don’t gotta be straight to play straight. Lord knows we have all done that before. I played straight for years and was not particularly good at it.

I should take my own advice and bitch less, but I’ve realized something: It is hard to be a constant beacon of light. First off, being positive isn’t nearly as funny as being bitchy. Second, it is just so easy to go dark; my thoughts are usually already there. And third — fuck it! I don’t need a third.

I like to think I would use the force for good, but more than likely, I would totally turn to the dark side. It just seems more fun. I think I am joking.

I’m not sure if my humor has gotten darker, or if I am just going through a phase. I kind of think that until we get back to whatever the new normal will be, this is who I am. I just feel like I have gotten so negative, and I do not like it. Or have I always been this way but didn’t notice because I didn’t care? Being self-aware is horrible.

On a positive note, I got pulled over by the police this week. Yes, I said “positive” because I only got a written warning. I pulled up to a four-way stop sign here in Midlothian and did what we call a California stop — you know, where you kinda stop, but it’s more of a slow-down-keep-going kinda stop. Any- way, the second I do that — mind you I am the only car at the intersection — I see the police SUV, and, of course, he immediately puts his lights on and comes after me.

I stop, get my insurance and driver’s license out and wait, just cussin’ myself the entire time: I’m so stupid. This is going to be expensive. God, I don’t wanna tell my husband about this.

Then the cutest, scruffy-bearded officer strolls up to my passenger side window. Bitch, he was fine AF. Every porno I have ever watched where the cop demands services to keep from taking you to jail went through my head. Y’all know I have a dirty mind.

But he said, “I know there were no other cars around, but you still have to stop, Mr. Love.” In my head I had so many witty, dirty things to say, but all I got out was “Yes, Daddy … I mean yes sir.” (JK)

He went to his car, ran my info and gave me a written warning. It made my day. I didn’t get a ticket, and I added to my spank bank. Win-win!

Remember to always love more, BITCH LESS and be fabulous! XOXO, Cassie Nova
